DESCRIPTION

A linear earthwork which can be traced for nearly 2km from just north of Lancy's Cleugh east-south-east on to Hareshaw Common (and therefore into Bellingham Parish). It consists of two parallel earth banks, which may in part have been revetted with stone. It intersects the head dyke A0471 more or less at right angles but the relative ages of the two earthworks cannot be determined due to excavation for drainage. It has not been traced further north on air photographs, and although it heads southwards towards Hareshaw Linn, its continuation has probably been destroyed by ploughing.

NOTES

The earthwork appears to be a boundary feature but cannot have been defensible. It may be similar to The Catrail in Roxburghshire.
